SHAKESPEARE'S BIRTHPLACE.

SHAKESPEARE'S BIRTHPLACE.

From The Stratford-upon-Avon Herald, Feb. 20, 891.

The Mayor of Stratford-upon-Avon (Mr. J. Archer) and the Town Clerk (Mr. T. Hunt) visited London on Puesday (Feb. 17) and attended before the Committee of the House of Lords stirling upon the Shakespeare Birthplace Trust bill. They were met by Sir Theodore Martin and Mr. Frederick Haines, two of the trustees who have rendered valuable assistance in the legal work. There were a few questions asked by Lord Morley, who was chairman of the committee, and as there was no opposition from any quarter, the bill was there was no opposition from any quarter, the bill was passed. Its course throughout has been unimpeded by the new powers which the trustees will gain they will be enabled to utilize their accumulated funds in the purchase of interesting books and manuscripts and any property of Shakespearean value. When the original trust deed was drawn it was not expected that there would be a surplus after providing for the maintenance of the buildings. The receipts from the visitors' fees, however, have been increasing year by year, and the accounts for the past twelve months will show that progress is still being made. It is of great divantage that the trustees should be able to utilize when the Birthplace and Museum. The first trustees who are incorporated by this bill are Sir Theodore Martin, Mr. Henry Irving, Sir Arthar Hodgson, the Rev. Charjes Evans, Mr. C. E. Flower, Mr. Edgar Flower, Mr. Henry Graves, Mr. E. E. Eaker, Mr. Frederick Haines and Mr. Samuel Timmins. In addition to these the bill provides for the appointment of ex-officio trustees, sonsisting of the Lord-Lieutenant of Warwickshire, the Mayor, Aldermen, Justices, Town Clerk and High steward of Stratford-upon-Avon, together with the viear of the parlsh and the headmaster of the Grammar school (the Rev. Mr. Krehbiel's analysis f "Das Rheingold," in its relation to the subsequent tevelopment of the tragedy of the Nibelungen ring. nade in a clear, easily followed and highly interesting nanner. With his explanations and the illustrations in the planoforte by Henry Holden Huss, the lecture not only reached its aim as a lucid exposition of the ubject, but was a charming entertainment as well.

Mr. Krehbiel pointed out the kinship and pan-nation dity of mythological tales, which make beautiful and induring legends universal property. He showed the parallel between the Grotto of Venus and the Garden Delight; King Arthur's "Avallon" and "Ogygia, the Delightful Island" of Ulysses and Calypso; Pope Ur pan's staff, the lances of Charlemagne, Joseph's staff and Aaron's blossoming rod; the "tarnhelm," with its power of invisibility, and the mask of Arthur; and beween many of the other elements and apparatus of development. To complete it and to put it upon the footing of a first-class Power would require an expenditure of about $65,000,000 more. Thus far the Government has either expended or authorized to be expended $70,000,000. This represents a round sum of $135,000,000 for a complete | time. Navy. The interest on this amount at 2 1-2 per cent, practically the interest paid on Government loans, represents the cost to this country of this most valuable kind of insurance. The amount is HE WRITES FOR "THE NEW YORK TRUTH" ON small in comparison with the security given I asked Secretary Tracy last night to give me his idea of how many more ships were needed than we now have to complete what he would call a sufficient Navy for that he would add from six to nine more battleships, each of 10,000 tons. These would cost $5,000,000 each. This is as cheap as they can be built in England. He would duplicate the New-York, which would cost $3,500,000. He would add from four to six harbor-defence vessels. costing each $2,500,000, and twelve torpedo boats, each costing $125,000. This would make a Navy the superior of any nation, not even excepting England, in point of availability and practica qualities.

WASHINGTON GOSSIP.

WHAT IS REQUIRED TO MAKE THE UNITED STATES A FIRST-CLASS NAVAL POWER.

OF TRAINED NAVAL (CONSTRUCTORS-

We have to-day already completed and author ized forty-one war-ships. These are all vessels of a modern class and will be well armed. Twentythree ships in all are now being built and are to be turned out within the next two years.

One of the most remarkable developments in the Navy has been in the ordnance service. Commander Folger, who is in charge of the ordnance work at Washington, is one of the best ordnance officers in the world. Through his skill and knowledge great economy and great rapidity in doing work have been attained. better illustration can be given of this than in the speed with which a rifled gun can be turned out to-day from the works. A gun which used to have the work done in fourteen hours. Guns of a quality equal to anything in the service of any nation are now being turned out in great numbers at the Washington Yard. One of the means of future defence for the harbor of New-York will be found in this modern equipment. One of the naval power to-day is the defenceless condition of the city of New-York. It is an undisputed fact that any one of the great battle-ships of the take up a position at her ease outside of the range of the guns of the present forts and destroy the city. Shells could be thrown into the city from a point nine miles out. It is not generally known that this danger does not exist to-day in the same degree that it did a short time ago. There are now being turned out of the works at Washington guns with a range of twelve miles, carrying the magnificent steel projectiles which could pierce the armor of any European vessel at present con-

These guns could be shipped over to New-York and mounted within two days' time. In the event of a war with England, and that possibility has been presented at various times during the Behring Sea controversy, it would be found that the lakes constitute another line of weakness. Here, under the treaty with England, we can main tain only one warship. This is the Michigan, an old wooden vessel, of no account in modern times. England has a large number of small torpedo boats of a draught so light that they could go through portunity is afforded of seeing at one time example the Welland Canal. She could have sent a short time ago a fleet of these vessels along the lakes and could have destroyed a number of the lake cities. To-day this would no longer be possible. The guns being turned out at the Washington Yard could be shipped quickly to Ogdensburg, they could come up. This evolution in guanery and a veritable hillside of butterfly orchids, on the naval development, and calls attention to the fact rounded by admirers. Two in the other arm of power-the War Department. In another way the Navy Department has been greatly strengthened, and that is in the education of its naval constructors. Formerly naval constructors were appointed from civil life. They were always good ship-carpenters, and at the time when the Department began to build a new navy represented the best that was to be obtained in the old field of wooden shipbuilding. They knew nothing, however, of modern ship construction. The first two plans of the new ships were purchased abroad. Since that time, however, the Department has developed its own constructors. and, while it copies the best things abroad, avail ing itself of the experiments made there, yet the improvements upon those plans and the methods of application should be credited to the fine corps of naval constructors of to-day. The modern naval constructor is a graduate first of the Naval Academy. The authorities there pick out the men who graduate at the top of the class, make them naval constructors and then send them abroad for three or four years to study in the best schools of Europe. These young men are fine physical specimens and represent the best knowledge attainable in modern naval schools. There are to-day only fourteen of these men. There have been graduated eighteen from the academy during the last eleven years. Of this number, three have died, creative, and one, Lieutenant Nixon, has resigned to accept a place at $7,500 a year in the employment of in the Cramps. The large percentage of deaths would seem to indicate that the young men have to undergo too severe a strain of study. But th naval authorities do not charge up these deaths to overwork. These young officers are to-day employed in the various yards where the Government is building new ships. One of them, Bowles, the inspector of the work at Cramps'. The grad7. The poet's language must have wings and be the inspector of the work at Cramps'. The graduates who become naval constructors are highly the way of administration, and come out with an education of a superior character for the railroad, steamboat or shipbuilding business. The result is that they are constantly tempted with large offers from private life. The majority of them, however, remain in the Government service spiration. until they think that they have compensated the Government for the splendid education which has been given them. One of the great reforms made in the Navy Department which has attracted no particular attention, so far as the public is concerned, is the concentration of the eight bureaus of the service under the personal direction of the Secretary. Formerly these eight bureaus worked as independent departments. Each was jealous of the rest and worked against them. The lines of their special provinces were not clearly defined and the general admin istration was crippled by their conflicts, their disputes, and their lack of harmony. It is difficult for a Secretary unfamiliar with naval matters Lycenm Theatre this evening by graduates of the at first to comprehend these differences and to inaugurate a policy which shall make these bureaus really subordinate to the Secretary. Secretary Tracy at first did nothing beyond seeking to master the Department in all its details before he made any changes. Several weeks ago he ordered certain Naval ship to sea from the port of New-York. All of her supplies were on board and everything apparently was ready. The ship received the peremptory order of the Secretary to sail at a certain hour. He was surprised to learn several days afterward that she was still in New-York. He at once began an investigation to find out the reason for this disobedience. He found that the Chief of the Engineer Bureau, in his character as an independent official, responsible to no one, had issued an order requiring the boiler of this ship to be repaired. This order had come that ships often received two and three separate orders from separate bureaus, each conflicting with the other. To-day this has all been changed Everything passes through the hands of the Secretary or his assistant and must be approved by him before an order can be issued. Naturally such a change as this was not brought about without difficulty. But under the Naval direction of affairs the heads of bureaus are removable by the Secretary and as a necessary consequence are easier to be controlled. It would be almost impossible reached what is called the middle point of its in the War Department for the Secretary there by the Tennis Committee this morning, when it was to make any great reforms in administration for places for life, and are consequently indifferent to men were compelled to give libe move them and is in office for a relatively short T. PICTURES OF THE FAR NORTH.

ME. STODDARD'S LECTURE ON "NORWAY, THE LAND OF THE MIDNIGHT SUN." The people who were assembled at Daly's Theatre yesterday morning to hear Mr. Stoddard were taken out of the crowded ways of fashionable travellers and away from cities into the midst of mountains and gorges and waterfalls and flords. The lecture was on "Norway, the Land of the Midnight Sun," and Mr. Stoddard has seldom had a more picturesque subject or one of which he took fuller and better advantage. The modes of travel in Norway, as described by the lecturer, are such as give the best opportunity for the enjoyment of grand and beautiful scenes and quaint hearers over the mountains by earriage roads, through visions of rugged grandeur, never lost in darkness and hardly less to be enjoyed at midnight than at noon. On the arrival at the first of the flords the journey is continued by steamer, and the pictures become if possible even fluer and more impressive. A wonder-ful country and a wonderful coast are described and picture, and the impressions of them conveyed are even more deep and vivid than are usually obtained in this way. The sensation is described as like sailing through Switzerland. By these memorable wanderings the traveller is brought to Hammerfest, the most northern town in the world, and then to the North Cape, where he is left standing on the most northern point of Europe, within the Arctic Circle and in the light of the midnight sun.

The regular attendant of Mr. Stoddard's lectures will probably never know how he gets out of the Arctic Circle, but at the beginning of the next discourse he will find himself in the Tyrolese Alps and on his way to Oberammergau. A large part of the lecture will be devoted to the people of that village and that country their manners and their character. This is as it should be, for it is impossible to look upon the Passion Play in a proper and understanding spirit without some in a proper and inderstanding spirit without some previous knowledge of the men and women who are entaged in it, and the great spectacle might almost better not be seen at all than be seen without such preparation. The lecture on Norway will be repeated this morning and to-morrow, and the three courses will end on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday with the lecture on "The Passion Play of 1890 at Oberam-mergan."

The fiftieth performance of "Nerves" was given at the Lyceum Theatre last night in the presence of a large aupiece, as the audiences usually are. Each lady present re offic of Swiss violet perfume, bearing a label with the line from the play: "I use it to please my wife; she gave it to me." "Nerves" and "The Open Gate" have both proved so satisfactory to the Lyceum Thratre ardiences that they
